Then there is the matter of shipbullions America has built a large fleet of merchant vessels during the avail themselves of American shipbuilding facilities and get into the ewnership, moreover, of American compaintes, for the benefit of foreign capital. Shall this opportunity for American business be lost to them? Preeding commerce and shipbuilding. If European countries are not willing to engage in agreement that give all mations an equal share, then the United commerce with ships flying the American flag.

The whole question of shipping and the big navies is involved in the "freedom of the seas." Mr. Wilson's supporters contend that European countries know generally what the president means and that he is standine for an American merchant marine. They insist that when the facts are known and when Mr. Wilson's position is developed at the peace table, American manimens will find that the president will not permit sentiment to sway his judgment on the necessity for a recognition of the position of American industry.

The interlegate this above

nition of the position of American industry.

The unfortunate thing, however, is that the president has not seen fit to take into his confidence the leaders of the Renublican party who could do much Mr. Wilson an even more powerful factor at the peace table than he will be. Already Sydney Brooks and other writers in British newspapers are saying that while Mr. Wilson is a large international figure personsity, he must submit the treaty to the American senate for ratification, and in that body he will not have a majority of his own party. In order to make foreign governments realize that the last election was not a repudiation of all the things America has stood for since she entered the war, and was chiefly a domestic quarrel in which the incompetence of the Democratic party in congress in dealing with domestic questions, was strongly denounced by the country, the course that is being urged upon the president now is one of conference and common counsel with his opposition.

the divisions in American opinion. An agreement on essentials between Mr. Wilson and the Republican leadership would mean the removal of obstacles to the ratification of the treaty or treaties which must ultimately be submitted to the senate.

The president has not been personally on good terms with some of the Republican leaders, but a conference with the entire membership of the senate foreign relations committee and a frank discussion with them of his plans would do more to promote the interests of the United States at the peace table just now thou amything else, and it is inconceivable that Mr. Wilson will allow personalities to interfere with the policies of the United States government at a moment when all Americans must stand together for America.

To Our Customers and Friends—

President Woodrow Wilson has issued a proclamation setting aside Thursday, November the 23th, 1918, as a day of Thanksgiving to Almighty God for the prosperity of our beloved country, and asks special observance of the day in return for the ending of the World War and restoration of Peace.

It is the opinion of this Association that, as a fitting compliance with this proclamation, all places of business should be closed for the entire day on November the 28th. So be advised that there will be no coal sold or delivered on this day.

the Associated Press.)-Prussian officers continue to contend that they are going home with the hope of being able eventually to bring about the reinstatement of the former emperor to power. The soldiers of a terman division, according to reports reaching the Americans, said they favored a monarchy.

The ex-emperor continues to be a popular idol, according to their views.
